MAY THESE GIFTS OF THE PAST
SERVE AS REMEMBRANCES OF THE
ORIGINAL TOWN AND THE REASONS
FOR WHICH IT WAS INCORPORATED.
To paraphrase Robert Kennedy, few will have the greatness to bend history itself; but each of us can work to change a small portion of events, and in the total, of all those acts will be written the history of our town. This anthology weaves together a colorful, historical tapestry to celebrate the 60th anniversary of Los Altos Hills. Stories and images recount the experience of everyday people, farmers, writers, entrepreneurs, innovators, and philanthropists whose lives have influenced the character of our town. From decade to decade, residents exhibit a spirit of independence, an appreciation for nature and wildlife, a high regard for quality public education, and a deep commitment to volunteerism and community service. Taken together, these values form our heritage. This heritage can be a source of pride, yet it is fragile — always on the brink of being compromised or lost. The goal of this anthology is to inspire an appreciation of our past and encourage participation in the small events that make our town unique.

God’s Little Acre
The bucolic little hillside town that started 60 years ago as a few hundred redwood ranch homes with roses around the door, averaging about 3,000-square-feet in floor area, is today dotted with far more majestic residences, with floor plans up to 20,000-square-feet or even greater. Wealth, the reward of the energy of brilliant entrepreneurs and gifted technical minds, has arrived.

The founders of the town expressed their dream of a quiet bucolic community, free from the constraints of county government, in two key founding documents: the so-called “Green Sheets” and the “Platform for Incorporation.” It was acclaimed writer and Stanford professor Wallace Stegner who dubbed the town “God’s Little Acre.” Members of the founding committee, including representatives from six neighborhoods, along with Stegner and other key residents helped lead a few hundred residents to vote the town into existence.

The early days of the town, were characterized by the utmost simplicity in government, minimum bureaucracy and many, many horses. The residents went happily about their daily round, content in the achievement of their dream.

But time did not stand still, and in adjacent Silicon Valley, a technical revolution that was to affect deeply the town as well as the entire world, was taking place. Fortunes were being made on an unimaginable scale, and the new captains of industry were searching for somewhere to plant their roots in settings of quiet and beauty. The Town of Los Altos Hills, with its seductive rural countenance, beckoned.

Alarmed longtime residents, mindful of the promise of the founding documents saw the invading bulldozers and graders as evidence of visitation by others with no regard for the sanctity of the unique environment, and thus protested. But as time went by, it became clear that many of the invaders were going to extraordinary lengths to build in harmony with their surroundings, and reaching out to recognize the concerns of their new neighbors. As in every community, there were a few with poor aesthetic taste or even disregard for others, but the new generation, with its optimistic take on human affairs, seems eager to maintain, in its own special way, the early objectives of the founders.

And just how successful are they in this endeavor? The Green Sheets called for the area to “remain residential, quiet, and reasonably rural... We want to walk around our house without knocking our heads on our neighbor’s eaves... We want roads that are content to remain country lanes... [We] want at least one acre of land.”

It would be hard to deny that these desirable characteristics endure today. And there are still no sidewalks, no streetlights; the town’s police and fire protection services are borrowed from outside. The new Town Hall is a model of sensitive rural design and environmental respect.

Sixty years after the founding of the town, despite many changes and growth, residents can be grateful that “God’s Little Acre” has been preserved.

The story of the first families to settle in Los Altos Hills begins with Martin and Mary Murphy’s quest for religious and educational freedom which leads the Catholic-Irish immigrants to Mexican California six years before the Gold Rush, where they rise from humble farmers to influential figures during California’s formative period. Much of the state’s commerce, agriculture and education start on their Santa Clara Valley ranch that encompasses Los Altos Hills.

A Family of Pioneers

The Murphy family’s California legacy begins in 1844 when the pioneers establish the first wagon route to California over the Sierra Nevada Mountains, opening the California Trail for thousands of other immigrants. Although this route is now called Donner Pass, it was the Murphy-Townsend-Stephens Party who pioneered this crossing.

The Murphy’s eldest daughter, Elizabeth “Lizzie” Yuba Murphy-Taaffe, who later receives Los Altos Hills as a wedding present from her parents, is born near the summit of the Sierra Nevada Mountains during the trek, earning her the distinction of being the first American child born in California, according to California.
Better Than Gold: Bay View Ranch (1849-1863)

Martin and Mary settle in Santa Clara Valley during the Gold Rush after Martin discovers the area during a business trip to purchase cattle that he plans to sell to miners in the gold fields near his Sacramento ranch.
His plans change when he sees the Valley with its rolling hills, oak orchards and open fields along the San Francisco Bay. He uses the cash he's carrying to purchase the 4,800-acre Rancho Pastoria de las Borregas (Sunnyvale). This property becomes his permanent home and the headquarters for his vast wheat ranching operations.

Here, he establishes Bay View Ranch, builds California’s first wood-frame house and plants the Valley’s first orchards.

In 1855, he expands Bay View to include the 3,000 acres of adjacent grazing pastures he had been leasing called Rancho La Purisima Concepcion (Los Altos Hills). He pays Juana Briones $7,000 (or about $2.33 per acre) for the land. Denied a formal education and the ability to write, Murphy seals the deal with his customary “X” on the land deed.

Bay View becomes the Valley’s political, social and religious center during the Gold Rush. California’s first Supreme Court is established at the home, and San Francisco’s first Archbishop Joseph Alemany performs marriage ceremonies and other religious services there. In 1881, the home becomes the site of California’s largest celebration at the time when the Murphys publish an open invitation for their golden wedding anniversary in newspapers statewide. More than 7,000 guests attend the three-day event.

A $14 Billion Wedding Present: Taaffe Ranch (1863-1875)

In 1863, Martin and Mary give 2,800 acres of the Rancho La Purisima Concepcion (Los Altos Hills) portion of their ranch to their daughter Elizabeth Yuba as a wedding present when she marries San Francisco dry goods merchant William Post Taaffe. The couple builds a home on the site where Foothill College is located today, and the property becomes Taaffe Ranch.

According to family folklore, Murphy considers this property less desirable for his wheat operations than the rest of his Bay View ranch. He possibly gives this land to Elizabeth knowing that William is a merchant and won’t likely use the property for commercial ranching. This “less desirable” land is worth about $14 billion today, based on 2015 median property values in the 2,800-acre tract.

William expands his San Francisco dry goods business to San Jose, but the couple does not live on the ranch for long. Less than five years after their marriage, both die a few years apart from illnesses, leaving Mary and Martin Murphy to raise their four children, William, Martin and twins Mary and Mathilda.
This 1904 map shows how the ranch was divided among the four Taaffe children. Section 1 (which included the area near today's Byrne Preserve) belonged to Martin and his wife Rose, whose handwritten notes show what pieces of property she planned to keep and which ones she planned to sell in the years following Martin's death. Sections 2 and 4 belonged to twins Mary and Mathilda, and are the last portions of the ranch to be subdivided. Section 3 (which includes the area along Purissima Road) belonged to William, who lost his entire inheritance in foreclosure in 1897. As a result, his portion of land was the first section of Los Altos Hills to be subdivided.
Inheritance: Taaffe Ranch (1880-1930s)
The four Taaffe children inherit equal shares of Taaffe Ranch, which evolves from rolling pastures to a stock and grain ranch. This generation, however, does not share the same success as their grandparents, and life on the ranch is marked with hardships and tragedy.
William “Will” Taaffe becomes one of the most extensive farmers in Santa Clara Valley after graduating from Santa Clara College in 1884. He supervises operations at his grandparents’ 4,800-acre ranch and manages the entire 3,000-acre Taaffe Ranch until his younger brother finishes school. He and his wife, Mary Dunne, build a country home on his portion of the ranch (near today’s Purissima Road) called Oakdale Villa. By 1897, Will is divorced and he has lost much of his money to his uncle’s San Jose Commercial and Savings Bank that failed during the Panic of 1893. He loses his ranch property in a foreclosure suit. He continues to operate his other ranch in San Luis Obispo and serves as deputy city treasurer in San Jose until a crippling illness confines him to his home. He dies in 1905.
Twin sisters Mary (Mollie) and Mathilda (Mattie) are the youngest of the Taaffe children, born in the house their parents built on the ranch. Their story is the most tragic of the four siblings. Shortly after both of their brothers die, the unmarried twins are deemed incompetent for mismanaging their finances and institutionalized in separate insane asylums, where they spend the rest of their lives and die virtually anonymous inmates. An appointed guardian liquidates the twins’ massive land holdings inherited from their grandparents, which included a portion of Taaffe Ranch, Asuncion Ranch and a portion of Sunnyvale.
Martin Joseph Taaffe is the only sibling who makes the ranch his permanent home.

There seemed to be a very close relationship between my twin aunts and my father because he always seemed so happy after a visit to their home in spite of all my pranks. Sliding down the banisters from the attic did not seem to be too awful even though quite risky.
BESSIE TAAFFE

A Stock and Grain Ranch: Rose Hill (1888-1930s)
Martin Taaffe calls his 1,100-acre tract of land Rose Hill after his bride Rose Hoffman, who is the niece of General Jose Castro, former governor of Mexican California. He builds a 12-room home at the top of today’s Taaffe Road. From 1887 to 1901, he operates a stock and grain ranch there. The Hills’ microclimate create conditions perfect for growing a special kind of hay for racehorses in San Mateo.
Life on the ranch appears to be idyllic for the couple and their five children in the early years until Martin experiences a series of hardships beginning in 1894, when an engine used to pump well water explodes and sears Martin’s lungs. Rose pulls him from the explosion and saves his life, but his health is permanently impacted.
Martin’s father-in-law Charlie Hoffman convinces Martin that Mexico’s warm climate will help his condition and brings him to work on his coffee plantation. Martin’s condition only worsens and he returns home two years later in 1900 unable to work the ranch. To make matters worse, an unprecedented rain on the Fourth of July, ruins the wheat that was cut and drying in the fields. Two weeks later, some hunting ammunition ignites, catching the family home on fire. The home is saved, but other ranch buildings are lost. During the same time period, union workers stage the largest strike in California history at that time, delaying Martin’s shipment of fruit and grain.

With money becoming scarce, Martin begins to lose land to foreclosure. He dies of Tuberculosis on his 36th birthday on Thanksgiving Day, 1901. Rose is left with enormous debt and five children to raise. She establishes a real estate and insurance company in Mountain View to generate income but the business plummets after the 1906 Earthquake, which unnerved many potential clients. Rose packs her bags and moves to Texas to be closer to her parents who live across the border in Mexico where they own silver mines.

Bittersweet Homecoming
Rose returns to Rose Hill sometime after 1916 with her sons Martin and Charles. With the main house still badly damaged from the 1906 Earthquake, the family takes up residence in one of the smaller worker cottages on the property.

The two Taaffe brothers start a construction company and life on the ranch seems to be going well until another tragedy occurs.

The family home burns to the ground in front of Rose’s eyes. Then, she loses the ranch in foreclosure during The Great Depression. Ironically, a short time later, Rose finds a long-lost bank book for an account that has been accruing interest since 1901. The account belonged to Martin’s uncle, who named him as an heir to his estate. Rose, who had never filed Martin’s will, inherits the forgotten money, but it is too late to protect Rose Hill from foreclosure.

From Ranching to Construction
After the family loses Rose Hill, Martin Jr. purchases 11 acres of property that once belonged to his uncle Will on Purissima Road, and establishes M.J. Taaffe Company. The construction company becomes one of two commercial businesses in Los Altos Hills history to be permitted to operate in the residential-only town. Adobe Creek Lodge is the other business.

Town founders allow the family business, which is passed down to his children Arline, Marty and Jim, to continue indefinitely. Much of the area’s roads and driveways are built and maintained by M.J. Taaffe Co., including the Town Hall, Little League Fields, Los Altos parking alleys and Covington Pool.

After operating for more than six decades, M.J. Taaffe Co. shuts down in the early 1990s. Marty’s son Ben starts the next generation of the business under the name M.B. Taaffe Co., which is still in operation.

Linda Taaffe is the great-great-great-granddaughter of Martin Murphy Jr. and the daughter of James Taaffe. Information for this article was taken from family and state records and other published historical accounts.
In the 1950s, most of Los Altos Hills looked like this — a blanket of apricot orchards draped over gently rolling hills, as far as the eyes could see. This is a view of La Paloma Road, looking toward Purissima Road.
The colorful history of Westwind Barn dates back to the mid-1940s when, after purchasing some 30 acres between Altamont Road and Central Drive, Frank Ellithorpe built a six-stall barn for Morgan and Arabian horses. The original six-stall barn resembled the gambrel-roofed barns found in New England. Gambrel-roofed barns, with two slopes on each side, allow more hay storage area under the roof than a gabled-roof design. Ellithorpe sold the land in 1965 to Robert D. Clement, who added 17 stalls, a tack room and a riding arena.

The property was sold in 1971 to the Countess Margit Bessenyey as a California extension of her Montana stud farm, where she raised Hungarian thoroughbred horses. The Countess, whose late husband was Hungarian ambassador to the United States, met the well-known horsewoman Linda Tellington-Jones in Badger, Cal. Bessenyey and Tellington-Jones moved the renowned Pacific Coast School of Horsemanship from Badger to Los Altos Hills, combining the training of Hungarian horses with a general equine education. Under Tellington-Jones’ management and Jim Forderer’s instruction, the Pacific Coast School grew, drawing students from all over the country and Europe. The Countess added a third wing and other elegant touches to the barn, including the ornate double oak door entry (carved in Mexico) and the elaborate spiral stairway (imported from France). A full-sized dressage ring was built and a difficult cross-country course was added to the growing complex.

In 1975, Los Altos Hills acquired a portion of the property for $25,000, and Countess Besseneyey bequeathed the town the remaining 13-1/2 acres of land and the 24,000-square-foot barn. After more than a year discussing the best use of the barn, the town council approved a proposal presented by Friends of Westwind to lease the barn as a cooperative facility, leading to the formation in May 1977 of Friends of Westwind, Inc.

A therapeutic horse-riding program for physically handicapped children was established in 1978. Westwind 4-H Riding for the Handicapped has served hundreds of children since its founding in October 1978. Thousands of volunteers have donated countless hours, many of them high school students fulfilling community service requirements. The establishment of a riding program for disabled children was created in response to the council’s concern that the Westwind Community Barn serve “the broader community.”

Westwind Community Barn is also home to the Pacific Ridge Chapter of the United States Pony Club. Many Los Altos Hills youngsters have been given the opportunity through the Pony Club to learn good horsemanship, team skills and leadership. The rigorous national program has spawned many members of the U.S. Olympic Equestrian Team.

In 2000, the Los Altos Hills Parks and Recreation Program established horse-related activities at Westwind Barn, including classes in horse management, a summer riding camp and a year-round riding program.

After 30 years of operation by the Friends of Westwind, the town in 2008 took over the management of its landmark equestrian facility. A number of improvements were made to address safety issues, landscape screening to create a more inviting entrance to the Barn, and new organizational measures were put in place. While the Westwind 4-H Riding Program for disabled children continued to flourish — offering its program to children ages 5 to 18 — the year-round riding program for the public at large (operated through the Los Altos Hills Parks and Recreation Department) expanded its programs, involving more and more children and families in the local area.

Soon after the town took over the running of the Barn from Friends of Westwind, the need became apparent to bring the Barn and its foundation up to modern structural standards. After completion of the seismic retrofit, the town began to consider different operating models. In 2014 the Town changed from managing the Barn itself to having it run under a concessionaire model operated by an independent professional.

In 2014, Torie Dye Equestrian was selected by the Town Council to operate Westwind as a Community Barn that would continue its public riding program and traditional events — such as the Hoedown, Christmas Barn Lighting, and Earth Day Celebration — while “striving to create a fun, community gathering location in which adults and children from Los Altos Hills and surrounding communities can find opportunities to safely connect around horses and nature.”

Today Westwind Community Barn is a thriving enterprise that fulfills the dreams of its founders – to be a focal point for the entire town in one of the most beautiful settings in the Bay Area.

Nancy Couperus was a prominent activist in the campaign that convinced the town council to retain Westwind Barn as a horse facility when it was first donated to the town. She is a former board member of Friends of Westwind, Inc. In 1978, she founded Westwind 4H Riding for the Handicapped, where she still plays a prominent role.
In May 1967, Dr. Albert Byrne, a Los Altos Hills native, donated a 55-acre nature preserve to be used in establishing the Albert Byrne Charitable Foundation of the Nature Conservancy. In appreciation of his generosity, the Nature Conservancy established the Albert Barnitz Byrne Preserve.

Byrne’s personal history is both colorful and interesting. The son of pioneer residents of the Los Altos Hills area, Byrne left home as a young man to mine silver in Nevada and later to do surveying in Oregon. In his 30s, he attended college and became a doctor. After practicing as a physician for a time, he volunteered for service in the Republican Army during the Spanish Civil War. When he returned to the United States, he served for many years as a doctor on Indian reservations before he retired in Texas.

In January 1968 the Town of Los Altos Hills agreed to the purchase of the land subject to the stipulation of Nature Conservancy that it remain in its natural state.

One of the conditions of approval was the agreement by the town that it would provide a connecting corridor linking it with Duveneck’s Hidden Villa Ranch and its associated open space. Through the efforts of local residents, a 21-acre corridor was purchased that fulfilled this requirement.

Commenting on the acquisition of the corridor, renowned conservationist and author Wallace Stegner said, “This corridor will be of inestimable value to the whole community, for it will provide open space, erosion control, walking and horse trails and that intangible but indispensable benefit we call ‘visual amenity’ — the pure pleasure of seen beauty.”

The Byrne Preserve open space is available for grazing of a limited number of horses on a year-round basis. Together with neighboring Westwind Barn, it offers the community — strollers, serious hikers, joggers or merely those seeking a moment of solitude in a pastoral setting — a welcome refuge from the hectic pressures of Silicon Valley.
The original Los Altos Hills was a farm and orchard community with each farm consisting of many acres of land and a manor house. The manor houses ranged from simple but sturdy (often adobe) farmhouses to true manor homes, such as the Winbigler manor. The Winbigler manor, a beautiful French château-style estate, was located at the corner of Fremont Road and Campo Vista Drive, and has a history that mirrors the town’s history and culture.

Early records show the current seven-acre property was originally a part of the Rancho La Purísima Concepción land grant. The land passed through many hands until William Cranston, a prominent Los Altos realtor, bought the 20-acre parcel in 1914. The property included an old shingled farmhouse and a conspicuous red barn and was collectively known as the red barn house. The Cranstons moved in with their baby, Alan, and his sister Eleanor. Future U.S. Senator Alan Cranston spent the first eight years of his life in the red barn house.

In 1922, the Cranstons sold the property to Dr. C.C. Crane, who demolished the old farmhouse and built the French château. The Winbiglers purchased the home from Dr. Crane in 1946. Dr. Donald Winbigler was dean of students at Stanford University. His wife, Mary Elizabeth, was a classical Spanish dancer who studied in Spain and toured America professionally as Marie Isabel before retiring to the bucolic life of Los Altos Hills. The Winbiglers lived in the house for more than 50 years.

The Winbigler property, resplendent in apricot and plum blossoms each spring, became a popular venue for local artists — it was common to find four or five artists painting the scene on a sunny spring weekend.

In the 1960s, one of the Winbiglers’ apricot trees next to Fremont Road died and shed most of its branches, leaving only a bowed trunk and a stubble of twigs that resembled a reindeer. Mary Elizabeth and nearby neighbors decorated the tree, affectionately known as Rudolph, for seasonal occasions from Christmas to Saint Patrick’s Day to Thanksgiving.

The house was sold in 2002 to a private party. That same year, the manor was razed without town approval.

Jim Steiner (1926-2010) was an active member of the community, named Volunteer of the Year in 2008.
Pathways

Pathways are a valuable feature of our community. Long-time residents will tell you that though there are fewer people on horses, the paths themselves are getting more use than ever. Paths were fundamental to the vision of the town’s founding residents, and they remain on the agenda as new neighborhoods are added to the town’s boundaries.

In the 1950s, residents were alarmed by the rapid urbanization of neighboring communities and the threat such development posed to the rural character of what became Los Altos Hills. The founders designed a system of roads with multiple cul-de-sacs to minimize the intrusion of cars, maintain privacy and conform to the hilly, wooded terrain. Integral to this plan was the system of pathways, roadside and off-road, which provided safety for residents walking along the narrow roads and vital connections between neighborhoods.

Visionaries such as Artemis Ginzton, Irma Goldsmith and Bob and Mary Stutz helped formulate the regulations. Through the years, the Pathway Element of the General Plan has been updated and refined, and a major update of the maps is underway. Yet the original principles supporting the pathway system remain constant. The first goal of the Pathway Element states: All residents of the town shall have immediate access adjacent to or across the street from their residence to a pathway or pathways, for safe and convenient pedestrian and other non-vehicular travel along town roads and to schools and community facilities, and for the recreational enjoyment of the natural amenities of the community. Another important function of paths is included in the second goal: Pathways shall also serve to provide access to and from neighborhoods in the event of an emergency. Although the pathways have been envisioned as a complete system, the “system” will always be a work in progress. Easements for the paths are obtained incrementally at the time of subdivision or site development. For this reason, years may pass before all the segments for a path are secured. Additional time may pass before a path is constructed over the easements. Paths along roads are typically located within or adjacent to the road right-of-way. Off-road paths generally follow property lines, connecting neighborhoods for the safety and enjoyment of residents. Whether roadside or off-road, all paths receive multiple layers of review before they are built. The process involves town planning staff, the Pathways Committee, the Planning Commission and the City Council. This public process allows residents multiple opportunities to participate.

The town pathway system provides a vital service by giving us a low-cost, accessible way to connect with the outdoors. The pathways contribute to our town’s open, rural character and provide all of us with an escape from the motorized, electronic focus of our lives. Pathways are a gift we care for and expand on for future generations.

Ann Duwe is chair of the Pathways Committee.
On the rainy night of Tuesday, January 10, 1956, the votes were cast and the polls closed at 7:00 p.m. By a close vote of 424 yes to 339 no votes the Town of Los Altos Hills emerged as Santa Clara County’s 14th city. In the town of 2,500, 65 percent of 1,200 total registered voters had cast their ballots.

State Supreme Court Justice John Shenk officiated at the swearing-in ceremony of the first Town Council, and the official date of the Town’s incorporation became January 27, 1956.

The first Town Council (shown on opposite page, top) consisted of Sidney W. Treat, retired executive and teacher, first officiating Mayor; T. A. Dungan, Bechtel Corporation chemical engineer, deputy Mayor; C. Easton Rothwell, director of the Stanford University Hoover Institute and former Secretary-General of the U.S. delegation to the United Nations; Leighton M. Bledsoe, attorney; and Arthur E. Fowle, philanthropist, replaced by son John “Jack” Fowle.

Arthur Fowle, at age 85, polled the highest number of votes in the race and was slated to become the Town’s first mayor. When he suffered a heart attack and had to resign on the advice of his physician, he appointed his son, John, to take his place on the council.

The Town Council immediately voted to continue existing county services, with the exception of the County Planning Commission. The original Town Planning Commission consisted of Richard S. Bullis, Richard S. Dawson, Raymond O. Hoefler, Proctor Melquist, Thomas Sherlock, William Simrell, Jr., and James Stedman.

When the town was incorporated, the old Purissima School served as a makeshift town hall (see opposite page, bottom). The original single-building school was built in 1901 for $1,051. It was sold in the mid-1960s and renovated to become the Little Chapel in the Hills. It is now known as St. Luke’s Chapel in the Hills.
When I was elected, our first and foremost issue was setting up staff. Our manager resigned immediately (we were elected to see that he did), and so the number one task was acquiring a new one. None of us knew much about hiring city managers, much less directing them. Our initial choice proved inappropriate, and so in my second year, when I served my first term as mayor, we had to correct our mistake: fire and rehire. Plus there were several other staff changes, many questionable actions and tense relationships to be corrected.

The top issue in town was — and always will be residential development. Houses were increasing in size at that time, and it took many planning and study sessions to set up standards that would preserve the town’s rural character while allowing adequate land use. Our town had been founded on environmental principles spelled out in the early Green Sheets. I saw my job as not only welcoming new residents, but also preserving the setting for the original residents.

I’m proudest of the work I did on the ordinances, making them fair and reasonable. Also, when I was elected, Los Altos and Los Altos Hills had a terrible relationship. Our managers were not speaking to each other and the councils never approached each other. When Jane Reed was mayor of Los Altos and I was mayor of Los Altos Hills, we decided to change that. One of our ideas was the Joint Awards luncheon in which unsung volunteers in both towns would be honored. We set the program up — and it is still going strong; the program celebrated the work of volunteers for the 30th consecutive year.

The enduring lesson I learned from being mayor is to listen — to seek out opinions and really listen to them.

MAJOR ISSUES

While running for council the first time in 1988, I vigorously opposed Measure B, which would have abolished the one acre minimum. I was elected, immediately appointed mayor, and the one acre minimum survived.

In the middle of my 12 years on council, we persuaded Sacramento to allow us to count secondary dwellings to satisfy the state’s mandatory affordable housing quota, which would otherwise have been subject to heavy fines. The town now has many secondary dwellings.

During my third term as mayor in January 1999, I had the swing vote on a sharply divided council, and I was able to force through a staff recommendation for what became known as the Fast Track system, which allowed staff to bypass the Planning Commission. Today a majority of building applications are fast tracked, saving applicants thousands of dollars, and much delay, and inconvenience.

PROUDEST ACCOMPLISHMENT

I am proudest of the implementation of Fast Track legislation, even though the basic idea came from Planning Director Curtis Williams.

MOST ENDURING LESSON

The most enduring personal insight gained was the enormous value of having warring neighbors compromise over divisive issues. This, I believe, is one of the most important functions of successful local government.

MAJOR ISSUES

During my term in 1991-92, one of the major issues was overseeing the development of the 360 acre Neary Quarry subdivision (Quarry Hills) which involved implementing the voter’s desire (passage of Measure B) to minimize ridge line development and maintain and expand the trail system in the area. Mid-Peninsula Open Space District and the owner (John Vidovich) negotiated the transfer of 280 acres to the District.

PROUDEST ACCOMPLISHMENT

I helped create an atmosphere of trust and cooperation between the citizens, staff and Council. Clear guidelines were established which clarified the Town’s building ordinances which in turn expedited project approvals.

Another accomplishment was organizing a special meeting to address the lessons learned from the 1991 Oakland fire. A special council meeting was held with representative from the fire department, sheriff’s office, and others. Many improvements were implemented as a result of this meeting to help the Town respond better to a fire emergency.

MOST ENDURING LESSON

It was important to create an atmosphere of trust and goodwill by being supportive of our staff and by truly listening to and respecting our citizens.
Street Names

Street names reveal a great deal about a town’s history. In Los Altos Hills, the name of many streets date back to the names of early settlers. Other names were chosen by land developers (in some cases using the names of their wives, children, or relatives) while a few were named in a more whimsical vein. Regardless of how the streets were named, their stories paint a colorful portrait of a small rural town as it grew over the decades.

Adobe Creek Lodge Road
The road takes its name from the recreational property that formerly surrounded it. It was forced out of business by the town’s prohibition on commercial enterprises. The name Adobe Creek came from the north flowing stream that originated on Black Mountain and flowed through Los Altos Hills, Los Altos, and Palo Alto.

Alexander Place
Named after Alexander Berger.

Altamont Road
Originally Elizabeth Avenue. The name was changed by town council in 1962.

Alto Verde Lane
Spanish for “Green Hill.” The street was named by town council on October 6, 1958.

Arastradero Road
This road was originally a cattle trail. It is the Spanish word for a road used for logging or pulling a dead bull with a rope.

Aric Lane
Named after the son, Aric, of Maurice Johnson, a subdivision builder.

Avila Court
Named for the property owner who owned a cattle ranch and kept many horses on the property.

Baker Lane
Named by the owner, Mr. Baker. He gave part of the property to his daughter, Mrs. Anderson, who lived at the top of the street.

Baleri Ranch Road
Named for early town residents.

Beatrice Lane
Named for Beatrice Fretz, wife of Paul Fretz, a real estate agent who with Mr. Cicerone, subdivided the seven acres around the Laura Bergner house.

Beaver Lane
Named for Dr. Beaver, a general practitioner who lived in the area. The property was originally an orchard and grazing field. The property was divided and the stable was remodeled into two houses. Foreman’s house was torn down. Dr. Beaver was on the freeway committee for the town.

Bentley Court
Named after Professor Rufus Clarence Bentley and his wife Ellen Hart Bentley. They bought a ten-acre apricot ranch at the south east corner of Burke Avenue and Fremont Road in the early 1930s after his retirement from Stanford University. The ranch was sold around 1945 and Bentley Court was subsequently subdivided.
Black Mountain Road
Originally named Yuba Avenue and a portion of Elena Avenue. The name was changed by town council in 1962.

Bledsoe Court
Named for a councilmember soon after the incorporation of the town in 1956.

Briones Court and Way
Named after Juana Briones who purchased the Rancho, La Purísima Concepción, in 1844. It later became a major portion of Los Altos Hills, stretching from Adobe Creek to Arastradero Creek.

Burke Road and Lane
Named for Jeret T. Burke who owned 60 acres in 1930.

Canario Way
Originally Arroyo Way. The name was changed by town council on October 6, 1958.

Carrington Circle
Alma Carrington Taylor requested the name in honor of her parents who bought 6.5 acres in 1920. The tract was subdivided by Bob Owen.

Christopher Lane
Named for Phyllis White’s son Christopher. White lived on Jabil Lane in Los Altos Hills.

Cicerone Lane
Named for the family that initially developed the subdivision.

Concepcion Road
Named after Rancho La Purísima Concepción the name of the rancho that Juana Briones purchased from Jose Gorgonio in 1844. Translated from Spanish, it means “the land of the immaculate conception,” based on the teaching of the Catholic Church. Specifically it refers to the conception of Mary who is born free of original sin. The ranch was named by the Catholic priests who ran Mission Santa Clara de Asís. In 1840 Governor Juan Alvarado granted the land to Ohlone Indians Jose Gorgonio and his son, Ramon.
